The Cambridge University Press is a registered trademark of the Cambridge University Press Limited.As the Dauphin and his little Eau de Vie de Menthe continue their journey towards Normandy, I had another look at the possible destinations for the Mont St. Michel in a post called "The Plan". I've been looking at the history of my region again recently. I have been working with my own historical map of the area where I live, and have identified several old trails and paths and have even walked along them. It was while I was doing this that I recalled that there is a little known trail along a brook that leads to the village of Clos Pagnolles in Normandy. It wasn't mentioned in the route description of the Camino Dauphin, but it seemed that it would be a good resting place. To get there, turn west from La Roche-au-Moine onto the D20 and continue towards Brion. There is a little place called Montrevel that is marked on my map. Just before the village is a little path that leads up a hill. There is a sign here that states that the path is not for the faint hearted. That should not be a problem for me and my Eau de Vie de Menthe. The path leads up and around the hill. There is a sign on it to indicate the distance. It only takes about 45 minutes to walk this route. The path is very quiet, and there is no real " 82157476af
